H. M. S. "Y"

It is early morning and we find the H.M.S.Y. lying at anchor in a beautiful cove where the water bubbles rise among myriads of water lilies and birds. In this picturesque scene we find native boys diving for pennies tossed from the deck of the ship. Anchors Aweigh! and the crew does a hornpipe of joy to start the day right. The passengers awaken and come on deck for their morning exercises—they stroll to the rail and watch the fish disporting themselves in the clear water below. Before the breakfast gong sounds the passengers' children have a morning dip amidst laughter and gaiety.

Breakfast over, the passengers promenade the deck—stopping to watch the crew at their life saving drill, followed by a practical demonstration on two passengers who had decided to go canoeing in the cove. Crew inspection by the officers follows this.

In the warm afternoon, following lunch, the passengers gather on the cool upper decks to watch the swimming and diving enthusiasts.

Evening falls and we attend the ship's concert. Entertainment varies with hand balancing, flying rings and nautical music. As night approaches the ship steals into another tiny cove and as the anchor slips into the dark waters, we watch the phosphorescent glow of tiny insects on the surface of the water.

Master of Ceremonies—Hal Williams.
